GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

Getting Beauty Down Pat

Skin tonics and mild astringents are to the complexion what a cold shower after a hot bath is to the body. Each closes pores, clarifies the skin and makes one feel fresher. Furthermore, tonics that are applied correctly stimulate circulation. They never should be smoothed or rubbed into the skin. Instead, a patting should be used.

Keep your bottle of astringent in the ice box or put a little of it into a dish and place the dish in a bowl of cracked ice for ten minutes. Then, when you have cleaned and removed it, wrap clean cotton around the end of a patting, dip it in the tonic and then pat face and neck.

Use only upward and outward motions while you are patting. Be careful not to bruise the skin, but pat briskly enough to make the blood rush to your face. If you don't own a regular patting, the end of a shoe tree, heavily wrapped with soft cotton, will do very well, so will a patting made from cotton alone.

Simply take a large piece of cotton, twist one end to make a handle and flatten the other end to form a hard pad. Use tonic on neck as well as face. If you have vertical lines between your eyes or horizontal ones across your forehead, be sure to pat them for an usually long length of time.

and reconsideration of this provision may be sought. The senate will meet at 2 p. m.

If the bill by Thompson of Hempstead county, to increase income tax rates, passed in the house, is called up in the senate, an extended debate is in prospect.

Commission to Meet
Enactment of the horse racing bill disposed of one of the most troublesome of the controversial questions submitted to the assembly. The racing commission, appointed by Governor Futrell immediately after he signed the measure Saturday, will meet at the capitol at 10 Monday morning.

Repeal of the run-off primary law was followed by senate passage of a preferential primary bill, on which a vote in the house may be taken this week. As the margin for repeal of the run-off was small, proponents of the preferential plan are hopeful the new measure will be passed.

The Saline and Grant counties' legislators are expected to oppose appropriation of $20,000 to purchase land near the State Hospital dairy farm on the Baucum pike and to pay the cost of removing buildings from the path of the caving banks of the Arkansas river.

Retention and enlargement of the farm southeast of Little Rock is favored by others, who insist that farming operations at the new State Hospital under construction near Benton would not meet all the needs of the institutions there and in Little Rock.

Of 238 acres purchased in 1920, more than 100 have caved into the Arkansas river, making necessary, those advocating purchase of additional land and removal of the buildings to sites north of the highway and railroad, so that there would be no danger of losing the structures in flood times.

The House committee appointed to investigate state penal institutions has been requested to recommend appropriation of approximately $12,500 for eliminating conditions at the state farm at Tucker, which are a menace to health of prisoners, Representative Ben Carter of Miller county said Sunday, after returning from the penitentiary farm.

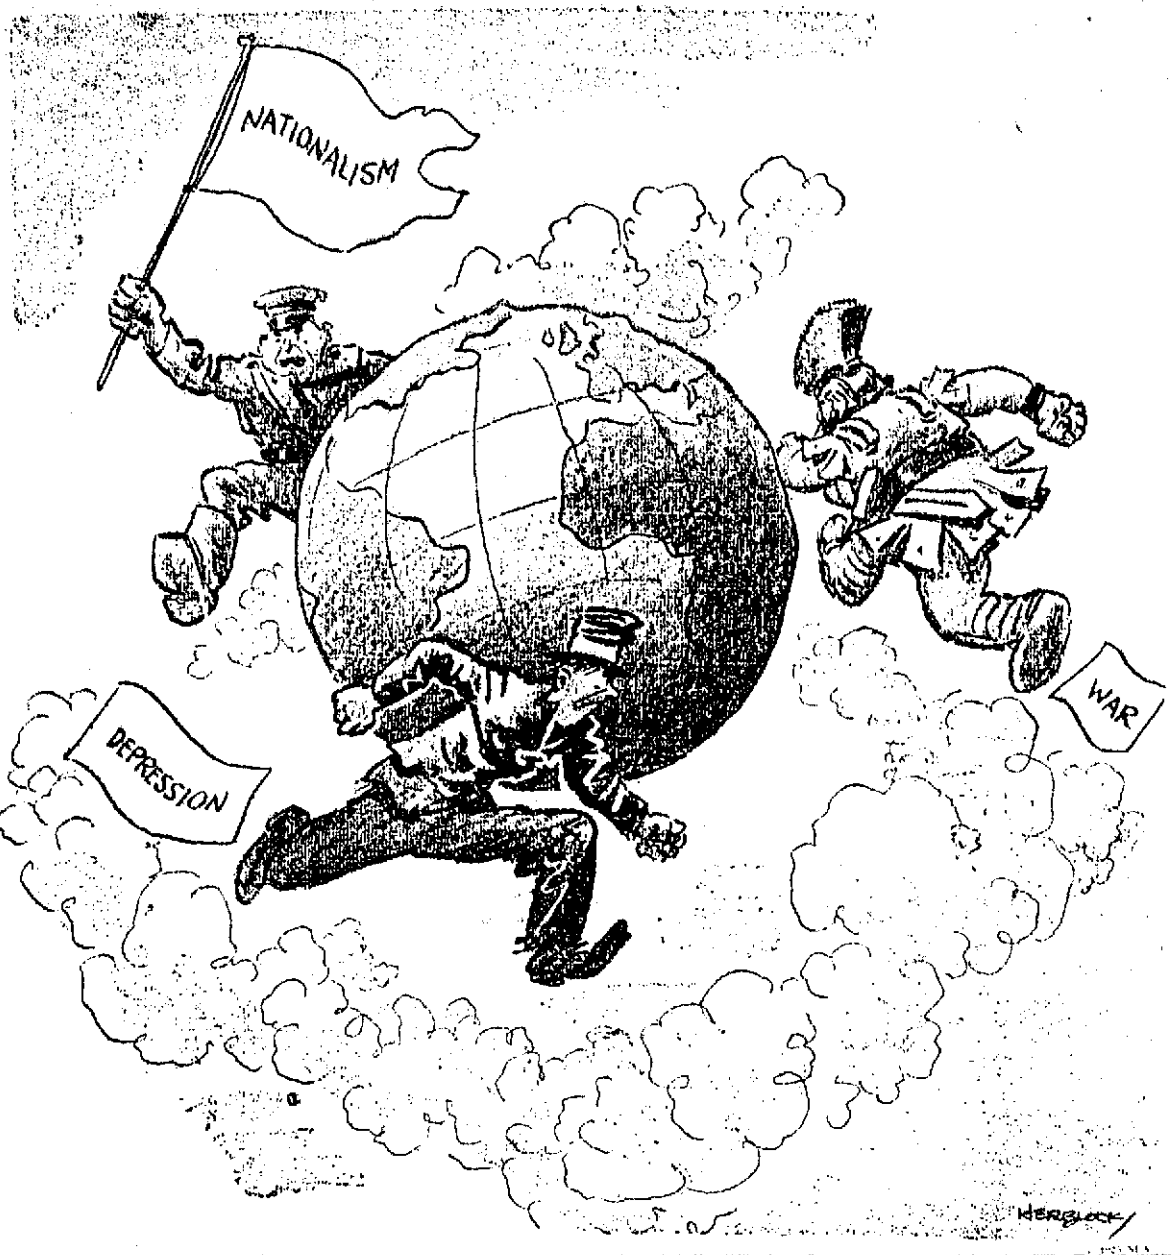

He said the committee would consider three necessary improvements at the prison. They are constructed of a receiving stockade to quarantine new arrivals, erection of a second stockade to house part of 150 men "who are now sleeping on 150 cots in one stockade," and purchase of medical supplies. The receiving stockade would cost $2,000, the housing stockade about $2,500, he said.

The committee, composed of Carter, Representatives L. L. Pilkinton of Hempstead, Carl L. Harris of Jefferson, Addison Coleman of Greene, and John K. Butt of Carroll county, visited the penitentiary farm Saturday and Carter returned Sunday, accompanied by a group of senators and representatives.

SILKEN SPINDLES

by Laura Lu Brookman © 1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Gale Henderson, pretty and 22, works in a silk mill. She has her 18-year-old brother, Phil, support their invalid father.

STEVE MEYER, who also works in the mill, asks Gale to marry him. She promises to give him an answer in a few days.

Gale goes skidding, breaks through the ice and is rescued by PHILIP WENDERSON, whose father, now dead, built the mill. Brian has come home after two years in Paris to enter the mill. Gale meets him before he can learn her name.

VICKY THATCHER, daughter of ROBERT THATCHER, goes to work in the mill, schemes to captivate Brian.

Gale and Steve quarrel, inter-duce up.

Vicky sees Gale in Brian's office one afternoon and suspects there is an affair between them. Vicky leaves in a rage, determined to show Gale she cannot take Brian from her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVIII

THE crowd shuffled out of the movie theater, stopping to look at posters announcing next week's show; girls peering to catch a glimpse of themselves in the narrow mirror panels at either side of the entrance, to powder noses and dab on rouge, clattering and laughing; young men who spoke in deeper tones, pausing to light cigarettes and then leave on firmly.

Steve Meyer looked down on Gale as they stepped out on the sidewalk. "Wasn't such a bad picture, was it?" he asked.

"Oh, I liked it. That girl who was 'Kathy' is a new star, isn't she? I've never seen her before. And didn't she look beautiful!"

The words broke off. A couple—a small girl in a bright red hat and rather dowdy fur coat and a tall youth—had just halted before the glass case where tickets were sold.

Steve asked, "What was that you were saying?"

"About the picture? Oh, I don't know—it doesn't matter anyhow. That was Phil with Ruby Griffith. Did you see them?"

"Yes."

They walked in silence for a few moments. Then Steve said, "I wish you wouldn't worry the way you do about Phil."

"How can I help it? You see the sort of company he seems to prefer."

"Ruby Griffith and her crowd. You know what they're like. And he comes home at all hours of the night and morning. It's only with in the last six months or so that he's been like this."

"Worrying isn't going to do any good."

"No, I don't suppose it will. But what can I do, Steve?"

"I LEAVE him alone. Phil's smart enough to take care of himself. The trouble is you're used to looking out for him. You still think of him as a little boy."

"But he's only 19—"

"That's not so young. It would be a lot better for Phil if you'd give him a chance to stand on his own feet. You do too much for him."

"Maybe you're right."

"Of course I am! You want to do too much for everyone, Gale. You're always forgetting about yourself, trying to do something for someone else."

"But I'm not! I don't do half the things I should."

"I wish you'd let me do them for you."

"Steve—"

"Oh, I'm not going to say any more. I promised I wouldn't, and I'll keep that promise. You said you couldn't marry anyone now. But there's one thing I want to ask you."

"When you were away at school—well, you must have known lots of other fellows. Is there any one else, Gale?"

"You mean—?"

"Is there anyone else you're in love with?"

Gale was glad she did not have to meet his eyes. She knew exactly how those blue eyes looked.

She turned away, surprised that her heart was beating so rapidly. She wished it wouldn't. Steve was waiting for her to answer and there was only one answer to give. You certainly couldn't count a man you'd met only three or four times and then purely by accident, even though he had said, "I like you. I like you. I like you a lot."

Gale said, "There's no one else, Steve. No one."

He put a hand on her arm, drew her close. His voice had an edge of huskiness. "Then I can go on hoping," he said. "Oh, Gale, if you only knew how I feel about you—"

"You promised," she reminded him.

"Yes, I know. I promised."

He began talking about something that had happened at the mill. Five minutes later they had reached Gale's home.

"You'll come in, won't you?" she asked.

"Not tonight. Going to be home tomorrow evening."

"I think so."

"Then I'll drop around."

THEY said good night and Gale went inside the house. Her father was in the kitchen, fumbling about an open cupboard.

"Hello," he said. "Thought I'd like a little something hot to drink. Is there some tea here somewhere?"

"In that square box," Gale told him. "But sit down—I'll make it for you."

She filled the kettle and put it over the fire to boil, got out cups and saucers and a loaf of bread.

"Where's Steve?" her father asked.

"He went on."

Her father watched as Gale cut the bread and placed it on a plate, set out butter and a bottle of milk. "You and Steve haven't been having any arguments, have you?" he asked.

"No."

Tom Henderson studied his daughter's face. She was certainly thinner than she had been. He did not say anything more until the tea was made and Gale had poured out two cups and sat down before one of them. Then he said, "I've been thinking about you this evening, Gale. I wish you didn't have to work the way you do."

"Nonsense!"

"It isn't nonsense. It's too much for you, doing all you do at home and working at the mill besides."

"Father, what in the world put such ideas in your head?"

"My own eyes have done it—seeing you look so tired when night comes and growing thinner. I can't help worrying about you, Gale. You ought to be married and settled in your own home. When your mother was your age—"

"But things are different now!"

"I know. But that doesn't make them any better. I've lived my life and some of these days I'm going to be gone."

"Father, please—"

"It's better to face things calmly. Gale—better to talk about them. I'm not afraid of dying. A man couldn't be who lives as I do, a burden to the ones he loves. No, I'm not afraid to die, but I wish I could know you were going to be happy and safe. I don't worry about Phil; he's a boy and he can take care of himself."

Gale had risen from her chair and slipped an arm around his shoulders. "Don't, father!" she begged. "I can't bear to hear you say such things! You aren't going to leave us—not for a long, long time."

He smiled. "Perhaps not. Still, I'd feel more comfortable to know things were going to be all right for you. I'd rather hope that you and Steve—"

"Steve's been an awfully good friend," Gale said. "I'm fond of him. But I don't want to marry anyone, father. Not now. Not for years."

"Well, if it isn't to be Steve I hope it will be someone as worthy. Steve's made of the right stuff. He's a fine young man, Gale."

"I know that. Steve's all you say he is—and more."

Her father covered her hand with his, pressed it. "Well, we won't talk about it any more tonight," he said. "It's late anyhow. Time to be in bed."

Gale rinsed the cups and wiped them, set the bread and butter away. "He thinks I should marry Steve," she told herself. "He wants me to marry him."

She was sober-faced as she put out the kitchen light and went to her bedroom, sober-faced as she stood before her mirror, brushing her hair. This mood continued throughout the following morning. It was Sunday and the Hendersons ate dinner at 1 o'clock. By 20 minutes past two when Gale had finished putting the last dish back into the cupboard, had wiped her hands and hung away her apron there was a knock on the front door.

Gale hurried to open it. A young man wearing a brown windbreaker jacket and corduroy trousers stood before her. His cap was pulled down over his eyes.

"Special delivery," he said, "for Miss Gale Henderson. Sign here, please." He held a pencil and pad toward her.

Change
Life's rarest moments are derived from change. The heart outgrows old happiness, old grief, and suns itself in feelings new and strange. The most enduring pleasure is but brief. Our tastes, our needs are never twice the same. Nothing contents us long, however dear.

The spirit in us, like the grosser frame, outgrows the garments which it wore last year. Change is the watchword of Progression when we tire of well-worn ways, we seek for new. This restless craving in the souls of men

Bodeaw in Surprise Win Over Bobcats

Nevada Countians Arrive on Invitation of Unknown Sponsor

Bodeaw High School basketball team scored a surprise victory over Hope at the high school gymnasium here Saturday night, winning by the score of 37 to 19.

The Bodeaw team, accompanied by a large delegation of rooters, arrived in Hope late Saturday. The team was primed for a hard battle.

Coch Foy Hammons of Hope was informed that Bodeaw was here, it was news to him. He had no game scheduled with Bodeaw.

The Bodeaw coach explained that he had been informed over telephone that Hope desired a game. The voice on the Hope end of the line had represented that of Coach Hammons.

Rather than disappoint the visitors, Coach Hammons hurriedly assembled a team. Only two regulars of the Bobcat lineup, Kennedy and England, could be located. Three members of the Hope B Team, Secrest, Crosnoe and Dabbs, filled in.

Bodeaw took the lead in the opening quarter and maintained it all the way. So impressed with the smooth floor work of the visitors, Coach Hammons formally scheduled a return game with Bodeaw to be played here Thursday night.

The Bobcat first team will be sent against Bodeaw in the next contest. The mysterious voice that arranged this game here Saturday night was still a puzzle to Coach Hammons Monday.

containing gold payment stipulations would become redeemable in 169,000,000 devalued New Deal dollars. Such debts, in other words, would be increased by 69 per cent.

The administration would have 25 days—the court's rulings become effective at the end of such a period—in which to forestall this and other unpleasant economic consequences by legislation or otherwise.

Roosevelt Program
Behind the specific cases at issue lie all the successive developments of the Roosevelt monetary program, but principally these:

Circulation of gold coin and gold certificates was forbidden.
The gold standard was abandoned.
Congress invalidated bond and contract promises to pay in gold or its equivalent.

The gold equivalent of the dollar was reduced from 23 4-5 grains to 15 5-21 grains.
Holders of corporate and government bonds, and gold certificates sued for payment in the present currency equivalent of the quantity of gold stipulated in the bonds and certificates.

That is, they contended a $1,000 bond should be redeemed for 1,000 times 23 4-5 grains of gold, or its equivalent in devalued currency, $1,390, not 1,000 times 15 5-21 grains or exactly $1,000 in currency, as ordered by congress.

They argued the action of congress was in violation of the constitutional provision, guaranteeing no one should be deprived of property without due process of law.

Various Decisions Possible
The decision might take any one of a number of turns, of which the most discussed are these:

The court could hold that congress had power to abrogate the gold payment clause where the bonds of private corporations are concerned, but that the government could not alter the terms of its own contracts.

It might rule the abrogation was legal for bonds public and private except government bonds held by foreign citizens, on the ground that a citizen of the United States in entering into the contract implied by the bond was subject to congressional authority to alter the currency.

It could uphold the government on gold certificate cases and rule against it on all other points. There are almost a score of such possibilities.

Treasury and Justice Department officials have worked out plans of action covering all. They include:

A proclamation under which the president would take command of the currency, basis for which is found in an old war-time law.

A tax to take the 69 per cent above face value that an adverse decision would cause in redemption of affected bonds.

Flat refusal at the Treasury to pay the extra 69 per cent, on the ground that it knows but one dollar, that ordered by congress when the currency unit was devalued.

DeAnn

The DeAnn Home Demonstration club met at the home of Mrs. M. R. Samuel February 13. The meeting was opened by the president, Mrs. J. M. Arnold. The devotional was omitted because the leader was absent. Our attendance was very good. Two new members were admitted. Now there are 18 of us, and there were 15 present last meeting and one visitor. We are hoping to have perfect attendance next time.

It was not possible for Miss Griffin to be present so Mr. Sam Damon from the Experiment Station came out and gave us a very interesting demonstration on landscaping. Reports from the different leaders were given.

After the demonstration the recreational leader thrilled us with some interesting games. The hostess served delicious refreshments, which was grape juice, cookies and candy.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. D. S. Samuel, March 13.

At nightfall, 17 convicts were still at large, three having been captured at Snyder, 30 miles north.

Two packs of bloodhounds bayed dolefully as possible hideouts were combed in the nearby mountains.

"The break was made with guns smuggled into the prison," declared Mrs. Waters, warden since 1927, whose administration recently was investigated after reports of cruelty.

"There were two pistols," she said. "The break was led by two or three hard-boiled inmates. One was Malloy Kuykendall. Another was Henry Stewart. Buster Nichols was in it, too."

Kuykendall, serving 75 years from Pottawatomie county for robbery with firearms had staged a break with two companions last August 20 from the jail at Tecumseh, Okla., locking up the jailer and members of Sheriff W. A. Roberts' family, and stealing the sheriff's motor car and machine gun.

If at any time prior to the planting of cotton this year there has been added to a farm, under contract last year, additional land by purchase or otherwise, the contract on the original farm will continue this year and the additional land will be covered with a separate contract, and the base acreage and average production of the new contract will be compared on the same basis as other new contracts.

Mr. Stanley explained that a new contract will replace the 1933 contract in case the land in a farm is reduced by sale or otherwise at any time prior to the planting of cotton this year.

In case of subdivision of a farm by sale, inheritance, or otherwise, before a contract is signed, each subdivision must be apportioned a percentage of the base cotton acreage and annual average production in the proportion that the cultivated land in each subdivision for the base period applicable to the entire farm bears to the total cultivated land in the entire farm for such base period, as determined by the county committee.

The minimum cotton acreage reduction under the 1935 contract can, in no case, be less than one acre, Mr. Stanley stated.

Any producer on a farm having a base acreage of not more than five acres but not less than one acre, may sign a contract for the reduction of any number of acres not in excess of the base acreage for his farm. In this case the producer will receive rental payments on the total of such acreage reduction.

Emerson Captures No. 10 Junior Title

Defeats Walker's Creek in Final at Buckner—Guernsey Eliminated

Emerson had little difficulty in disposing of Walker's Creek to win the district 10 junior boys' basketball tournament held Saturday night at Buckner. The score was 28 to 18.

Second place honors went to Walker's Creek. Silver trophies were awarded first and second place teams. Guernsey, entry from Hempstead county, was eliminated during the day's session. About 30 games were played during the one-day tourney.

On the all-district team, five different towns rated one player each. They were: Emerson, Walker's Creek, Mt. Vernon, Guernsey and Taylor.

Preparations are being made to hold the district 18 senior girls tournament at Stamps Friday and Saturday of this week.

The district senior boys tournament will be held in Hope, March 1 and 2.

Patmos, southern Hempstead county school, was defeated twice in basketball games played in Hope Saturday afternoon.

Patmos senior boys lost to Saratoga, 17 to 15. Saratoga senior girls won over Patmos sextet, 23 to 22.

Radical College

000,000 at his disposal. Whether this might be considered a step toward injection of the college policies into the national government is a question which the committee will seek to answer, he said. It was pointed out, however, that Dr. Zeuch was inclined more toward Socialism than Communism and that it was this clashing in opinions that resulted in his leaving as director of the institution.

"College Advocates Nothing"
Sunday night, as they packed preparatory to their departure from this beautiful hill country for the capital, committeemen quite frankly admitted they had expected nothing like the high type of intellect found among the rustic college officials and students. Little did they expect to have question parried by question. And never once did a student or teacher answer directly one of the committee's question, they said. The entire situation as explained by the college witnesses was couched in qualifying words and phrases, with each and every witness making clear that "the college advocates nothing. The college is merely the place where references are available. The teachers do the advocating personally, and some of them admitted boldly that they are the highest type of radicals, not adverse in the slightest to the use of militant force to achieve overthrow of the entire economic system.

Bill Cunningham, one of the instructors, explained probably as clearly and as briefly the attitude at the college when he said that "We feel that the whole economic system is wrong, that the government ought to own business like it does the postoffice. He admitted that personally he advocated the exertion of force to the extent of revolution, to achieve this overthrow."
